works by Kevin Townsend

Kevin Townsend’s expanded drawing practice is driven by monumental questions about time, duration, obsession, and mark-marking while simple, small details often animate it. The artist’s meditative works range from intimately scaled, delicate drawings that develop over hours on paper to large, architecturally scaled pieces that evidence days of marking. While the practice of drawing traditionally lends itself to creating a picture or “thing,” Townsend engages this discipline as a document or record of time and memory. Beginning with a single line, the artist draws each proceeding mark in response to the one before it. The result indexes a laboring body’s movement through space and the passing of time. On a micro level, Townsend’s drawings are individual, humble marks that accumulate to resemble swarms, clouds, and compressed typographies. Without a definitive edge or ending, each drawing is a boundless meditative performance that traces and archives the passage of time. Townsend’s repetitious, uncomplicated marks are synchronously time consuming and embracing of chance, allowing his work to exist within a liminal space that is equally structured and organic.

presents Townsend’s practice as a three-step progressive model, referencing an architectural concept where plans are presented at three scales. This approach guides viewers through the stages of the artist’s practice as they navigate the East Gallery’s circular layout and trace his work’s evolution from intimate to architectural scale. Guests are first met with a modified replica of the artist’s studio. Townsend’s small-scale sketches and works on paper are pinned to the gallery wall alongside his ink pens, and books that influence his practice. At this stage, works are intimate in scale, like models, and represent the earliest phase of how the artist begins to work through larger concepts that he will ultimately scale up. As viewers continue to move through the gallery, Townsend’s drawings evolve to be at scale with the human body. The exhibition culminates with a site-specific, forty-foot wall drawing created over the course of one week. Townsend’s drawing process expands in this third stage by enveloping viewers within the work. As a result, the gallery shifts from being a site that holds artwork to a space where viewers experience the drawing and the site becoming the same thing.

About the Artist

Kevin Townsend is a Kansas City-based artist with an expansive drawing practice that fuses mark-making, duration, and temporality. His obsessive drawings range from intimate works on paper to large works at the scale of architecture. Townsend’s drawings are rendered and exhibited on urban surfaces, building facades, interior spaces, museums, and galleries in cities across the US, Canada, Europe, and Australia. His drawings simultaneously index the passage of time and a laboring body’s movement through space. Each mark is a tick of the clock, a thought, a decision, and an action that, once collected, evoke swarms, fields, clouds, flows, or topographies.

Townsend holds a BFA from the Corcoran School of the Arts & Design at the George Washington University, Washington D.C. and an MFA from the School of Visual Arts, New York City.
